Australia's business recovery is marked by procurement reforms across the three tiers of government. This is led by embracing "digital marketplaces," opening opportunities for small-to-medium enterprises and ensuring the sourcing of goods and services are transparent, accountable, and commercially-savvy.

The overall accountability underscores governments' annual spending that is capped at more than A$64 billion. On the technology front, the public sector IT spending is forecast to exceed A$13 billion this financial year, representing a substantial increase from the previous year.

Governments' appetite for procurement innovation and delivering "bang for the buck" comes under the spotlight at the 4th Annual Australian Gov Procurement Summit. The information-packed agenda is tailored for professionals that seek to optimise procurement innovation, together with flexibility for contract negotiation, and staying agile, nimble, and open to change.
