Managing safety in a transport task need not be difficult. Whilst the social aspect to managing safety exists for a reason and should remain, if you consider risks from a capitalist's view point, you're on the right path to managing a mobile workplace.

Hazards or risks are best discovered before they cost your business significantly, the cost of injury alone can be crippling. So how do you do it? How do you find a risk, before it becomes an incident in a transport task you manage?
